This week: "Did you know?"

Cathy Donelson literally "wrote the book" on Fairhope. Twice! If you've been to the Walgreens at 98 and Fairhope Avenue, you've probably seen her work: "Fairhope, Alabama" (2005), and "Fairhope in the Roaring Twenties" (2013).

As a little girl, Cathy wanted to become Editor of Vogue magazine. "Growing up on a cotton farm in Alabama's Black Belt, the 1940's was the same as the 1840's. Things didn't change much." While her father was a sea captain and often away, Cathy's mother subscribed to Vogue, otherwise known as "The exotic thing that came into the house besides the Montgomery Advertiser."

At Fort Morgan, after Hurricane Frederick created the need for historic restoration, Cathy lived in the old light-keeper house "that had miraculously survived Farragut's 'Damn the Torpedos.'" After putting her heart and soul into Fort Morgan, a publisher told Cathy she should could live anywhere... So Fairhope!

"I wrote that first book to let people know Fairhope is growing, and bulldozers were bulldozing." In addition to the Marietta Johnson Museum, and historic preservation efforts, Cathy worked with the federal grant program that documented downtown historic districts: <https://bit.ly/3DEjS4o>. A loss for Vogue, but a treasure here, Cathy has contributed to the ultimate in popular Fairhope fashion - preserving memories of our exotic past! Thank you, Cathy Donelson!
